Abstract of the Invention

A device and method for converting one stereoscopic format into another. A software-enabled matrix is used to set forth predefined relationships between one type of format as an input image and another type of format as an output 5   image. The matrix can then be used as a look-up table that defines a correspondence between input pixels and output pixels for the desired format conversion.